Dear Jim,

I've learned about your disappointment regarding your plans for studying in China after high school. I completely understand your feelings, and I'm here to support you through this challenging time.

It can be tough when our dreams and aspirations clash with our parents' wishes, but remember that there are ways to work through this situation.

It's crucial to have an open and honest conversation with your parents. Try to understand their concerns and reasons for not giving their approval. At the same time, calmly express your own desires and aspirations.

Sometimes, parents object to certain plans because they worry about their child's future and safety. By addressing these concerns maturely and demonstrating that you've considered these factors, you might be able to ease their worries.

Remember, even if things don't go as planned immediately, don't give up on your dreams. If you need further advice or support, don't hesitate to reach out to me.

Yours,

Li Hua

Dear Jim,

I'm sorry to know that you're at odds with your parents, and I'm writing to give you some suggestions regarding your volunteering plan.

I hate to disappoint you, but I do think your parents have a good point. Due to historical reasons, many Africans don't have a good impression on British people, so you might suffer from bias there.

On top of that, some regions of Africa are at war, or having an outbreak of deadly pandemic, which puts your life under threat. Thus, I don't think you should take the risk.

I know you're a boy of kindness, and I respect you for that. But why not go somewhere safer, like India or the rural areas of China, where you can realize your self-value without worrying your parents and friends?

I hope I'm not being a nuisance. Do consider my advice, will you? Please let me know your final call.

Yours,

Li Hua

✓ Point 1-你对该计划的看法

I really admire being caring and loving to African fellows, and your devotion to the volunteering plan to Africa should definitely be praised. However, your parents' worries about safety issues didn't come from nothing, thus some modifications can be made to your plan. (C4 杨知音)

I think it's a noble thing. Africa is developing and they need helping hands from kind people like you. It's a pity that your parents oppose to it. I bet your will comes from the very desire to help others, but if we put ourselves in parents' shoes, their rejection is understandable. (C3 朱思宇)

✓ Point 2-你的建议

要努力自己登上这里!

In that case, I suggest you switch your volunteer location to somewhere else with better public security system. Make sure your volunteer program is authorized and the organisation is reliable, or at least legal. If you really want to give a hand to Africa, you can make it through other means like donating money to some specific charity. If you still insist on going to Africa, share your detailed plan with your parents to gain their support. (C5 曾广惠)

✓ 全文

Dear Jim,

I'm sorry to hear that your plan to volunteer in Africa didn't get your parents' approval.

From my points of view, volunteering is a good deed benefiting both the target and the whole society and it's warm-hearted of you to plan to volunteer. However, we can't deny that Africa may not have conditions as good as where you live, so it's normal for your parents to worry about your safety.

精准

Here I offer some advice to address your parents' concerns. You can share your exact destination and your detailed schedule with your parents, so that they'll feel at ease (knowing where you are and what you do). Joining in a volunteer group with adults can be a good choice. Since the adults can keep your safety, your parents may worry less. Don't forget to promise your parents that you'll keep regular contact with them.

Hope your plan will be successfully carried out. Wish all the best.

Students' Version 1:

Dear Jim,

I'm sorry to hear that your plan didn't get your parents' approval.

Having had similar experience before, I know exactly how frustrated you must feel. But don't worry. With my suggestions, I'm sure you will have a nice cycling trip with your parents' permission.

Firstly, since your parents are mainly concerned about your safety, you'd better cut the duration of your journey from one week to around three days, or at least have an adult go with you to make sure you won't run into danger. Additionally, you need to be fully prepared by getting your bicycle, clothes, medicine and all the other stuff ready, showing your parents that you're able to take good care of yourself and they needn't worry about you.

Everything considered, I hope you'll have a fully-prepared, safe and of course unforgettable journey. All the best!

Yours,

Li Hua

One Possible Version:

Dear Jim,

I am sorry your parents won't let you go on the bike trip.
 Having had a similar experience, I really know what you're going through, but try to understand where your parents are coming from. Safety is most likely their number one priority.

I suggest you tell your parents that you've planned well by showing them the route you will take; this will put their worries to rest. Also, tell them you've checked the weather forecast for the next seven days. Finally, tell them you've made a list of supplies that you'll take on your trip. After doing these things, I'm sure your parents will let you go.

Cheer up, my friend! Wish you all the best and good luck!

Dear Jim,

I hope you're doing well. I received your letter asking about the "China's Aerospace Achievements Exhibition" that our school organized for the senior students. Here are the details.

The event took place last week, and all the senior 3 students participated. It lasted for three hours, from 9 am to 12 pm. During the exhibition, we had the chance to attend a fascinating lecture by a space expert, who shared insights into China's space program and its achievements. We also watched informative videos showcasing China's space exploration milestones. Additionally, we had the thrilling experience of a simulated spacewalk, which made us feel like we were floating in space.

The event generated a positive response from everyone who attended. We were all inspired by the lecture, as it gave us a deeper understanding of the hard work and dedication behind these achievements. The videos and the virtual reality experience made the event interactive and engaging, leaving a lasting impression on us.

I hope this information gives you an idea of the highlights of the exhibition. If you have any more questions, feel free to ask. I'm always happy to share my experiences with you.

Possible version 3

Dear Jim,

I'm glad to know you are interested in the Science and Technology Festival held in our school last week. I'm writing to tell you something about it.

The festival was organized to inspire students' creativity and enthusiasm for science and technology. There were various activities including traditional ones like the model aircraft show and hot air balloon launching. Some new projects were also added, among which the most popular one was the presentation of the "Future-changing Designs". Students were asked to come up with new ideas and display their inventions that could change the world. The performance of many talented and creative students was so amazing. We challenge ourselves and will sure change the future.

The event generated a positive response from everyone who attended. The festival was a great success, which not only enriched our school life but also cultivated our interest in science and technology.

I hope you can come and experience it next time.

Yours, Li Hua

3. Always knowing your curiosity on how foreign students like us learn your mother tongue, I believe this can be a great opportunity for you (我相信这对你来说是一个很好的机会来) to meet your interest. We will meet every Friday afternoon for discussion starting from next week.

Dear Jim,

As you know, we are required to do research-based learning this term. I am writing to invite you to join my team.

Here is the detailed information. We intend to compare Chinese literature and English literature in the same historical period, for example, Shakespeare and Tang Xianzu of the Ming Dynasty. Since there was little chance for pure literary exchange between nations in history, what we are doing can help great writers from China and Britain talk spiritually to some extent.

I want you in because I know you have a great passion for British literature. Your professional knowledge will surely help us in efficiency and accuracy. Also, just imagine the sense of awe you may get from the similarities and differences we will find! If you are interested, let me know before next Friday.

Looking forward to your reply!

Dear Jim,

How is it going? We plan to form a research-based learning group. I wonder whether you would like to join us.

Our topic is "A Study on the Differences between British English and American English". We will mainly focus on their differences in terms of spelling, pronunciation and vocabulary. The aim is to make us familiar with the underlying causes and effects of the differences so that we can gain a better understanding of the English language.

I know you are a native speaker of British English and you lived in America for several years, so hopefully you can give us some guidance during the research process. I believe your involvement will add much joy to our group. Please inform me of your decision by this Friday.

Looking forward to your reply.

Yours,
Li Hua

43. Please share one of your own experiences about your practicing being fair-minded. (In about 40 words)

Possible version 1:

When in Grade 10, I had a debate with my parents over the curfew. Initially, I screamed for more freedom. However, upon attempting to see the matter from their perspective, I fully understood their concerns about my safety. From then on, I never return home later than nine o'clock.

Possible version 2:

One experience of practicing being fair-minded was during a group project in college. Despite differing opinions, I made sure to listen to all perspectives, consider them objectively, and ultimately make decisions that were equitable for everyone involved.

Possible version 3:

During a disagreement with a friend, I consciously set aside my emotions and tried to see things from their perspective. I made an effort to listen attentively, consider their feelings, and work towards a resolution that was fair to both of us.

Possible version 4:

In a work setting, I had to mediate a conflict between two colleagues. I ensured that both parties had equal opportunities to express their perspectives, actively listened to understand their viewpoints, and facilitated a compromise that addressed each person's concerns fairly.

Once I was leading a team of nine to build a bridge model when I found that one teammate wasn't contributing at all. Restraining my anger, I recalled her usual enthusiastic behavior and tried to stand in her shoes. Then, I realized that she was simply limited by her poor physics, so instead of firing my anger at her. I encouraged her to decorate the finished parts and she happily agreed.

2.5分：情节完整，语言简洁，逻辑清晰。

When engaging in school drama practice, I practiced being fair-minded. At first, I finished reciting all my lines and was annoyed that others hadn't kept with my speed, thus slowing the pace of rehearsal. However, I reminded myself to accept the differences of remembering ability and recognized the fact that the others might have other tasks to do. I became more fair-minded and gained a better attitude to treat others.

3.5分：情节完整，语言简洁，逻辑清晰。

I practiced being fair-minded during my trip to the hospital. Waiting in lines for hours to seek medical treatment for my skin, I became annoyed and the idea of urging the doctor to work faster flashed into my mind. But then I realized that doctors were most concerned about the health of their patients rather than productivity. As a result, I understand the slow and serious way doctors treat everyone and become less self-centered.

Dear Jim,

As you may have known, our class is going to hold a class meeting themed 'Information Safety' on Mar. 20th, and I'm writing to invite you to attend it.

With the aim of raising our awareness of protecting our private information in the digital age, the meeting will begin with a lecture on the importance of cybersecurity and how to take precautions against cyber-crimes, followed by a series of puzzle-solving games which contain lots of relevant knowledge. At last, we'll end the event with a discussion where

Title:

Dear Jim,

I'm glad to hear that you're curious about our school's activity called 'Career Planning' and I'm writing to provide you with some details.

Last week, our school held the event with the intention of making us clear of our destination. We were involved in some well-designed games, which gave us an insights into our personalities. Then came an informative lecture which told us the connection between our characteristics and our career, making us know what jobs are suitable for us.

The event generated a positive response from us. We are now more ^{clearer} ~~clear~~ about our future. Thus, we can take some specific measures to qualify ourselves for our dream jobs.

Do you have any similar activities in your school? Please write to me and tell me something!
